

RE:Imagining Red Square Source

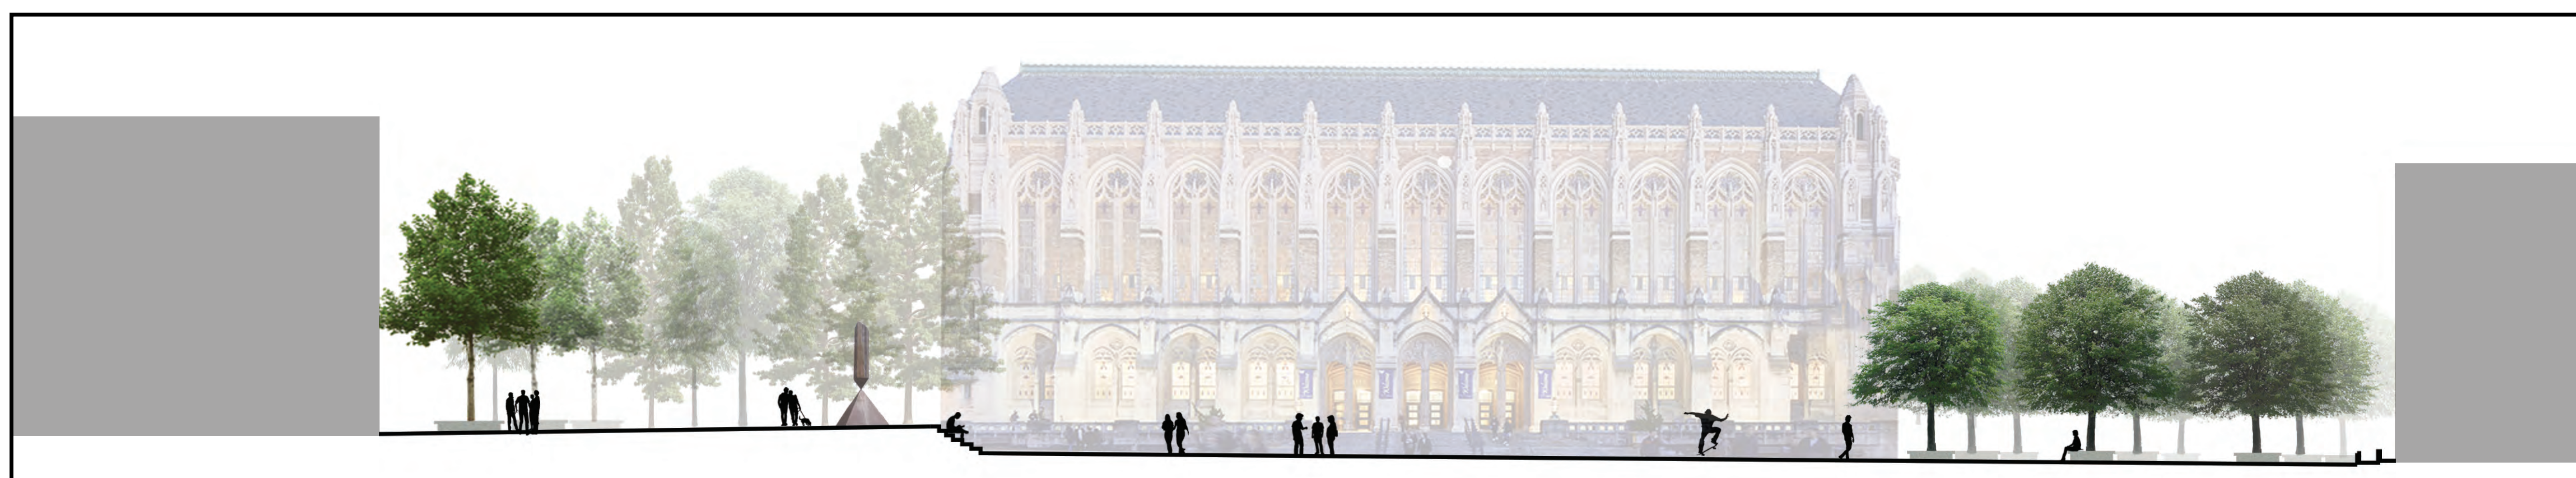

Orienting Red Square as the Heart of Campus and Source of Leadership and Knowledge

The center of Red Square represents the University of Washington's role as a source: of innovation, of community, of history, and of leadership. Standing at the crux of the Kane Hall stairs, which we have extended out into Red Square, a clear day provides the visitor the sublime view of Mt. Rainier and the Olympic Range, reigniting the sense of possibility and connection beyond campus. A fountain cascades down the stairs and flows through runnels towards Drumheller Fountain and the George Washington statue, creating the literal source of the campus watershed and symbolizing the flow of knowledge and ideas that emanate from the more figurative source: the university. A gridded network of trees on the edges of the space provide seating areas and private spaces while also leaving ample open space for gatherings, events, and protests.
